KAFFIR CORN THE NATION'S FOOD

Staple New Mexico Product Will Soon Be Staff of Life: Kaffir Corn Breakfast Food Really Nourishing.

That Kaffir corn which is one of New Mexico's best crops will soon become a part of the nation's menu is the prediction made by a writer in the Kansas City Star. Although the Kaffir corn breakfast food is yet to be invented, the writer has small doubt that it will come. He says: To discover something new for human beings to eat—something they will like—means a good deal in a world which has never more than a two week supply of food ahead. Because we live in such a world we worry about our food supply—when we have time to stop to think about it. The population grows rapidly, and the farmers, instead of raising more to eat, are moving to town. Maybe this old world will go to bed supperless some night, as James J. Hill prophesied a few years ago.

But it seems fanciful after all when you recall that the United States grows Kaffir corn. For Kaffir corn, perhaps you don't know, has been added to the menu of mankind. Not Kaffir corn with cream and sugar on it, but "dishes" made from Kaffir corn flour and meal.

"Will you have a Kaffir corn Parker House roll? Or maybe you would prefer a piece of Kaffir corn Boston brown bread. (The names are a bit tedious.) And won't you have a Kaffir corn muffin? Do try a Kaffir corn doughnut. Now a piece of Kaffir corn sponge cake."

Did you say you didn't believe you cared for any? Just try them once. You don't know how good they are, and you may not like it at first. But it's not the least objectionable. You can learn to like it. Many are very fond of it.

An experiment in cooking Kaffir corn foods was conducted recently in the domestic science department of the Kansas Agricultural college. In most of the many receipts tried the results were highly successful. Some mighty attractive foods were cooked with Kaffir corn flour and meal. Some of them were: bread, Parker House rolls, Boston brown bread, muffins, Johnny cake, baking powder biscuits, griddle cakes, doughnuts, cookies and gingerbread.

White turka flour, blackball Kaffir flour, white turka meal and blackball Kaffir meal were used. The only difference between the two meals, as shown by the results, was the darker color of the blackball products. In the case of a white or light mixture, the blackball variety gave a slightly darker color which made the article a little less attractive in appearance. In the case of the sponge cake, where this difference of color was hidden by the yellow of the egg yolks, or in the spice cake by the molasses and spices, practically no difference was noticed between the two flours or the two meals.

The meal makes a good substitute for cornmeal, as it can be used in nearly every case that cornmeal is used. When the meal is used alone, more liquid is required to mix it, and it lacks sufficient gluten to hold it together. It also is rather harsh and flat tasting when used by itself, but when mixed with wheat flour the flavor is pleasant. The wheat flour also supplies the gluten which the Kaffir corn lacks. In nearly all cases a mixture of two of Kaffir corn flour to one of wheat flour is good and in most cases mixtures of "half and half" were satisfactory.

Here are a few of the receipts used successfully in the experiment, at the agricultural college:

Boston Brown Bread—1 cup Kaffir Cornmeal, 1 cup Graham flour, 1 cup bread crumbs, 1 teaspoonful soda, 1 cup molasses, 1 cup milk, 1 egg, 1-4 teaspoonful salt. Soak the bread crumbs in a very little water. Add molasses, milk and egg. Mix the remaining ingredients together and combine mixtures. Steam from two to three hours.

Kaffir Corn Muffins—1 1/2 cups flour, 1 teaspoonful baking powder, 1-4 teaspoonful sugar, 1 egg, 1-4 teaspoonful melted butter, 1/2 cup milk, 1/2 cup molasses, 1/2 cup Kaffir corn meal. Mix and sift dry ingredients, and milk gradually, egg well beaten, and melted butter. Bake in a hot oven in buttered gum pans twenty-five minutes.

TURPENTINE MAY BE PRODUCED IN THE WEST

Experiments on the Fort Valley Experiment Station Show Western Gum is of High Quality.

Experiments recently reported upon to the forest service officials here show that the turpentine possibilities of the west offer a great field in the future, when supplies in the southeast are exhausted, or nearly so. At present prices are high enough to profitably work the western fields.

The Fort Valley experiment produced gum of a high quality, from close inspection, but not analysis, gum that is every bit as good as that produced in the southeastern states, from which most of the turpentine now comes. It cannot, however, be produced as cheaply as that in the southeast, because of the high cost of transportation and the relatively few trees per acre on western forests. But at any rate, the experiment produced 7147 pounds of gum from 21 chippings on 1300 acres.

This is considered a favorable yield, and is believed to have demonstrated conclusively that turpentine gum in paying quantities and of a paying quality, can be produced from western yellow pine.

The gum will be sent to the government laboratories at Madison, Wis., for analysis and examination.
